Team Lee Welcomes You

Welcome to Fort Lee – The Home of Sustainment.

Whether you're visit is temporary or long-term, we hope you'll enjoy all of the things our installation and the local area have to offer.

Fort Lee is situated alongside the tri-cities of Virginia – Petersburg, Colonial Heights and Hopewell. It shares many similarities with its neighbors. In addition to its primary mission of training sustainment Soldiers, Fort Lee is a community, a workplace and a home to hundreds of military families.

Not long ago, Fort Lee was designated to become the Army Sustainment Center of Excellence – a focused training base for military supply, subsistence, maintenance, munitions, transportation and more. That decision sparked a massive base modernization mission with a budget of more than $1.2 billion. In addition to new training facilities, administrative areas, dining facilities and barracks, Fort Lee has experienced phenomenal growth among its support facilities for military families.

Fort Lee has witnessed a massive population increase as well. Much of that is due to the realignment of military organizations from other parts of the nation. In addition to the Combined Arms Support Command, Sustainment Center of Excellence Headquarters, Team Lee now consists of the Army Logistics University, the U.S. Army Quartermaster School, the U.S. Army Ordnance School and the U.S. Army Transportation School.

The tenants of the installation include headquarters elements of the Defense Commissary Agency, Kenner Army Health Clinic, a Military Entrance Processing Station and the 49th Quartermaster Group, a U.S. Army Forces Command organization that has the only two active-duty mortuary affairs and the only active-duty petroleum and water group headquarters in the Army inventory.

By the end of 2011, Fort Lee's daily population is expected to exceed 45,000 and as many as 70,000 troops will pass through its classrooms each year, making it the third largest training site in the Army. These are the most significant statistics of all ... Fort Lee fully recognizes its tremendous responsibility and the privilege to provide the most comprehensive training and quality of life services possible for the members of the military family who will pass through its gates.

On a final note, the installation command team asks all Fort Lee visitors to exercise caution as they travel throughout post. Slow down, especially around marching troop formations, construction sites and housing areas.

Fort Lee welcomes you. We hope you will find your visit, your training or your assignment rewarding. We're proud to say you're a member of "Team Lee."

Pinnacle Property Management (Post Housing)

1510 Sisisky Blvd.
Fort Lee, VA. 23801
Website: www.lee.pinnaclefamilyhousing.com
Phone: 804-733-1558

Family housing on post is operated and managed by Fort Lee Commonwealth Communities, LLC. The office hours are Monday - Friday, 8:30 a.m. - 5:30 p.m.

Fort Lee family housing is divided into three grade/rank designations: junior noncommissioned officers, senior NCOs and officers. Currently, Fort Lee has five separate housing neighborhoods: Jackson Circle, Harrison Villa, Madison Park, Jefferson Terrace and Monroe Manor. All of the neighborhoods provide space and amenities normally found in private sector developments.

Transfer of all housing assets at Fort Lee occurred in June 2009 under a program known as the Residential Communities Initiative.

It resulted in a new multi-year project in which housing units will either be replaced or completely renovated. Fort Lee transferred all of its housing assets. Over the next several years, the remaining housing units will either be replaced or completely renovated depending on age and condition. Pinnacle is constructing additional housing units in new neighborhoods with an estimated end state of 1,493.

Currently, several units on Fort Lee are handicap adaptable for special needs residents.

Bedroom composition ranges from two-bedroom to five-bedroom units within the different neighborhoods. Our neighborhood communities have dedicated teams consisting of two community managers, along with five resident relations specialists, four leasing agents, a maintenance staff and groundskeepers.

It is not mandatory that military members with families reside on post unless they occupy a key and essential position. Renters should thoroughly review their lease and if provisions are unclear, they should have it reviewed by the HSO and/or Staff Judge Advocate.

Housing residents are required to sign a lease and will receive a Resident Handbook upon assignment to a home on post. Residents will be notified of changes in policies, procedures and information through newsletters and at www.lee.pinnaclefamilyhousing.com.

There are two community centers managed by Pinnacle: the Welcome Center located at 1510 Sisisky Blvd. and the Jackson Community Center located at 800 Jackson Circle.

Residents assigned to Fort Lee Family Housing may rent the community centers for events and activities. A deposit is required to rent the facility. Smoking, use of alcohol, catering or money making activities are not allowed in these buildings.

Family housing floor-plan for junior enlisted grades E-1 - E-5. Floor plan shows the first floor layout of a three bedroom duplex unit.

Ordnance Corps Association

PO Box 5251
Fort Lee, Va. 23801
804-733-5596

Since the beginning of the Army history, branch identification and allegiance has been a united Soldiers with the purpose, history and traditions of their branch. However, from the late 1960s and through the 1970s, the Army de-emphasized branch identification and stressed specific specialties. While Soldiers still wanted to maintain identity with the branch, each branch lacked a central corps to preserve and promote its heritage and traditions. The pride, prestige and heritage of each branch was not being passed along to each generation of new Soldiers.

When school commandants were placed in charge of their branches, many programs developed to foster a closer cohesive spirit between soldiers and their branch. Slowly, time honored traditions began making a comeback. The Army Regimental System was a major effort to resort and instill regimental traditions.

After a dedicated effort, the U.S. Army Ordnance Corps Association was formed and approved for the express purpose of providing Ordnance Corps military and civilian personnel, their families and institutions having an interest in Army Ordnance affairs with an organization dedicated to creating a professional and social bond. The Association was officially chartered, in a ceremony held October 1, 1985, at the Regimental Headquarters with Major General William E. Potts, then the Chief of Ordnance, accepting Membership No. 001.

Interest has grown during the past several years as Ordnance Soldiers and civilians, along with hundreds of members of the Ordnance retired community, have joined the Association to maintain a bond with their Ordnance colleagues and stay abreast of Ordnance Corps developments.

The Sustainment Center of Excellence is the largest Fort Lee Base Realignment and Closure initiative and houses the Army's Combined Arms Support Command, a multi-functional organization overseeing all combat developments and training in logistics, human resources and finance for the Army. While continuing to have units spread across the nation, expertise in supply, services, maintenance, munitions, explosive ordnance disposal and transportation is centrally located at Fort Lee – making the SCoE the gateway for Army sustainment.

Recently CASCOM, as the Army's SCoE, consolidated logistics centers and schools from several installations – the U.S. Army Transportation Center and School from Fort Eustis, Va.; the U.S. Army Ordnance Mechanical Maintenance School from Aberdeen Proving Ground, Md.; and the U.S. Army Ordnance Munitions and Electronics Maintenance School from Redstone Arsenal, Ala.

These schools joined Fort Lee's established schools, the U.S. Army Quartermaster Center and School and the U.S.

Army Logistics Management College. The Soldier Support Institute, which includes the Adjutant General School, Finance School, Recruiting and Retention School and the Army School of Music, is also an integral part of the SCoE though not located at Fort Lee.

The SCoE creates a logistics and sustainment training center unlike any before and provides the best possible training to military sustainers. Combat developments, force structure developments, sustainment materiel solutions and training doctrine for all components of the Army takes place within the SCoE headquarters at Fort Lee.

The Defense Commissary Agency operates a worldwide chain of more than 250 commissaries providing groceries to military personnel, retirees and their Families in a safe and secure shopping environment.

Commissaries originated in 1825, when the Army began selling goods to officers at cost, to provide a convenient, low-cost alternative to buying from civilian merchants.

On July 1, 1867, the modern era of American military commissaries began once Congress authorized enlisted men to make such purchases. Thereafter, commissary sales took place at every Army post.

After 1909, each service developed its own commissary system. In 1991, the services' independent commissary systems were all consolidated into one agency and DeCA assumed full direction and control of all military commissaries. Today, commissaries are considered a cornerstone of the military's quality of life for nearly 12 million authorized commissary patrons around the globe.

Whether stationed in a high cost-of-living urban area in the United States or at an isolated post overseas, military families are able to afford that taste of home by buying their favorite foods at affordable prices. Shoppers save an average of 31.1 percent on their purchases compared to commercial prices – savings worth about $3,400 annually for a family of four. Authorized patrons purchase items at cost plus a 5 percent surcharge, which covers the costs of building new commissaries and modernizing existing ones.

All commissaries in the United States and its territories accept manufacturer's coupons, food stamps and Women, Infants, and Children vouchers. Nearly all of the commissaries overseas accept WIC vouchers. DeCA continues to make a concerted effort to bring outstanding quality produce to every store, inform young active duty military members of the benefits of commissary shopping, and use effective two-way communication to respond to customer needs.

A valued part of military pay and benefits, commissaries contribute to Family readiness, enhance the quality of life for America's military and their Families, and help recruit and retain the best and brightest men and women to serve their country.

The QMS serves as the focal point for the development of the Quartermaster doctrine, training, leader development, organizations, and materiel requirements needed throughout the force structure.

Nine enlisted specialties, five warrant officer specialties and three officer specialties are trained at Fort Lee. QMS is a part of the U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command, headquartered at Fort Monroe.

Fort Lee History

Fort Lee located in America's Historic Heartland ... in Tidewater Virginia, twenty-five miles south of Richmond, and very near the confluence of the James and Appomattox rivers.

Colonial Beginnings

For thousands of years Native Americans hunted the woods, fished the rivers, built their villages and raised their crops in the vicinity of today's Fort Lee. Here was centered the Powhatan Confederation, whose tribes met the first European settlers upon their arrival at Jamestown in 1607.

Those who followed in the wake of Captain John Smith and company soon established thriving plantations along the James River and deep into the interior. The land hereabouts provided 17th and 18th century farmers with a rich harvest of tobacco, corn, beans, root plants, vegetables and more. By the time of the American Revolution, Virginia's population had grown to nearly 200,000.

In April 1781 British troops under Major General William Phillips landed at Old City Point on the banks of the James River (at present-day Hopewell) and marched through Fort Lee property to defeat a much smaller patriot force defending Petersburg. In October that same year Washington and Rochambeau's combined forces captured Cornwallis at the Battle of Yorktown – less than two hours' drive from Fort Lee – and thus secured America's independence.

Eight decades later, another army crossed Fort Lee. This time it was Union General Ulysses S. Grant. Strategically located on the banks of the Appomattox River, 23 miles south of the Confederate capital of Richmond, the town of Petersburg served as a major road and rail center throughout the Civil War. In the spring of 1864, a combined force of more than 100,000 Yankees marched across Fort Lee in a surprise effort to cut off Confederate General Robert E. Lee from his supply base. The nine-and-a-half month siege that followed was the longest in U.S. history. Four historic markers today trace the route of the United States Military Railroad that crossed Fort Lee bringing supplies to troops along the siege line.

The First Camp Lee

Within weeks after the United States declared war on Germany in the spring of 1917, the War Department acquired a vast tract of farmland in Prince George County, Virginia (between Petersburg and Hopewell) for the purpose of building here one of 32 military cantonments. Construction of Camp Lee began in June. By September, more than 1,500 buildings and over 15 miles of on-post roads had been completed. Soon members of the 80th "Blue Ridge" Division – made up of troops from Pennsylvania, Virginia and West Virginia – began arriving for training.

Before long, Camp Lee became one of the largest "cities" in Virginia. More than 60,000 doughboys trained here prior to their departure for the Western Front and fighting in France and Germany. Included among the many facilities here was a large camp hospital situated on 58 acres of land. One of the more trying times for the hospital staff was when the worldwide influenza epidemic reached Camp Lee in the fall of 1918. An estimated 10,000 Soldiers were stricken by flu. Nearly 700 of them died in the course of a couple of weeks.

Camp Lee continued to function as an out-processing center throughout 1919-'20 following the First World War. In 1921, the camp was formally closed and its buildings were torn down, all save one – the so-called "White House." During the war, this two-story frame structure served as 80th Division Headquarters and as temporary residence for its Commander, Major General Adelbert Cronkhite. Years later it became known as the "Davis House" in honor of the family that lived there in the 1930s and 40s.

Except for the Davis House (which is still in use today) and a handful of overgrown military trenches, there are no other visible signs of all the training and other activities that took place here during World War I. During the interwar years, the property reverted to the Commonwealth of Virginia and was used mainly as a game preserve. The only evidence of persons in uniform was the Civilian Conservation Corps camp that opened at nearby Petersburg National Battlefield in the 1930's-era Great Depression.

The Second Camp Lee

With storm clouds again rising in Europe, Congress approved the call-up of nearly 300,000 Guardsmen and Reservists in late August 1940. In September, the U.S. government passed a Selective Service Act that allowed the drafting of up to 900,000 more men for a year. And in October, the War Department issued orders for the rebuilding of Camp Lee on the same site as before. Overnight, the area became a beehive of activity as thousands of civilian laborers swarmed into the Petersburg-Hopewell area and began building at a furious pace.

Even before the first barracks were constructed, raw recruits for the Quartermaster Replacement Training Center moved into tents in the heart of Camp Lee to begin training. In October 1941 (two months before Pearl Harbor) the Quartermaster School moved from Philadelphia to Camp Lee to begin training officers and noncommissioned officers in the art of military supply and service.

Over the course of the war, Camp Lee's population continued to mushroom until it became in effect the third largest "city" in Virginia, after Norfolk and Richmond. More than 50,000 officers attended Quartermaster Officer Candidate School. Over 300,000 Quartermaster Soldiers trained here during the war. There was a Regional Hospital with scores of pavilions and literally miles of interlocking corridors capable of housing more than 2,000 patients at a time. Here too was located the Army Services Forces Training Center, the Quartermaster (Research & Development) Board, a large contingent of Women's Army Corps Soldiers and, for a while, a prisoner of war camp and the Medical Replacement Training Center. Camp Lee enjoyed a reputation as one of the most effective and best-run military installations in the country.

Following V-J Day in 1945 troop strength rapidly decreased, but Camp Lee continued to serve as the major Quartermaster field installation and as an out-processing center for those leaving the military.

The Post-World War II Era

Unlike the military infrastructure drawdown after World War I, there was no immediate decision to dismantle the second Camp Lee. The Quartermaster School continued operation and, in 1947, the Adjutant General's School moved here as well (where it remained until 1951). The Women's Army Corps likewise established its premier Training Center here from 1948 to 1954.

Also in 1948, the first permanent brick and mortar structure – the Post Theater – was constructed.

On April 15, 1950, the War Department reached the critical decision to keep Camp Lee as a permanent facility, and it was renamed Fort Lee. At nearly the same time, the Quartermaster School picked up the "supply by sky" mission from the Infantry School at Fort Benning and that led to the first airborne rigger training program at Fort Lee. Then, in June 1950, the war broke out in Korea. Once again, the installation quickly sprang to life as tens of thousands of Soldiers arrived between 1950 and 1953 to receive logistics training for what would later be called the "Forgotten War."

The 1950s and '60s witnessed almost nonstop modernization efforts as, one by one, Fort Lee's temporary wooden barracks, training facilities and housing units gave way to permanent brick and cinderblock structures. New multi-storied barracks were built in the mid-'50s, along with whole communities of Capehart housing for permanent party. The new three-story Quartermaster School Classroom Building, Mifflin Hall, was dedicated in May 1961. Kenner Army Hospital opened in 1962, replacing the remnants of the old WWII-era facility; and the privately-funded Quartermaster Museum opened its doors in 1963. Some years have seen far more change than others, but the overall process of modernization has continued ever since.

The rapid logistics buildup in Vietnam after 1965 signaled an urgent need for many more Quartermaster Soldiers. Fort Lee responded by going into overdrive. For a time, the school maintained three shifts and round-the-clock training. A Quartermaster Officer Candidate School opened in 1966, for the first time since World War II. A mock Vietnamese "village" was created on post to familiarize trainees with guerrilla tactics and the conditions they could expect while fighting in the jungles of Southeast Asia. Part of the sixties-era Quartermaster training program also saw the first widespread local use of automated data processing equipment.

Fort Lee at the Turn of the Century

As Vietnam – “America’s longest war” – wound down in the early- to mid-1970s, the Army went through a period of reorganization. It introduced new doctrine, weapons and equipment and unveiled new training and leader development techniques. In 1973, the Continental Army Command (CONARC) headquarters at Fort Monroe was replaced by the U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command (TRADOC). Here at Fort Lee, the U.S. Army Logistics Center was created to serve as an “integrating organization” for the Quartermaster, Transportation, Ordnance, and Missile and Munitions centers and schools. All of the traditional combat service support branches were functioning here. There was a post reorganization and realignment in 1990. The Logistics Center, which heretofore had been a tenant activity, was redesignated the U.S. Army Combined Arms Support Command (CASCOM). Its senior officer would serve as the installation commander as well.

Since World War II, Fort Lee has played host to a growing number of tenant activities like the Army Logistics Management Center (ALMC), Readiness Group Lee, Materiel Systems Analysis Activity, Gerow U.S. Army Reserve Center, Defense Commissary Agency (DECA), USAR 80th Division, and several other Department of the Army and Department of Defense activities. During the 1990s, the Enlisted Supply and Subsistence and Food Service departments moved into modern training facilities. New petroleum and water field training sites were constructed. A whole new three-story wing was added to ALMC. Also, the Quartermaster NCO Academy and barracks complex was completed, as well as new on-post child care and physical fitness centers. Throughout this period the Quartermaster School routinely graduated 20-25,000 students annually, and ALMC another 10-12,000.

Two other QM School academic departments – Petroleum and Water, and Aerial Delivery and Field Services – each received state-of-the-art headquarters and training facilities after 2000.

In May 2001, the Army Women’s Museum opened at Fort Lee, with more than 13,000 feet of gallery space and thousands of artifacts used to tell the long, proud history of women in the Army.

Two historical forces in particular left their mark on the shape and direction of Fort Lee at the dawn of the 21st Century: first, the Army’s increased involvement in contingency type operations at home and abroad; and second, events surrounding the aftermath of 9/11, the 2001 terrorist attacks on the Pentagon and New York’s World Trade Center. Fort Lee has frequently been the site of tailored logistics training, immediate processing and rapid deployment of specialized logistics units and personnel – for operations such as Just Cause, Desert Storm, Restore Hope and many others. That process continues to the present with Operation Enduring Freedom (Afghanistan) and Operation New Dawn – the follow-up stability mission that began when the U.S. ended its Operation Iraqi Freedom combat mission in September 2010.

Also in the wake of the 9/11 terrorist attacks, Fort Lee, like all other military installations across the country, has had to institute new policies and procedures to help protect against any future acts of terrorism. A new fence was erected to completely enclose the fort. The main gates no longer go unmanned. Protective barriers have been placed around key buildings. And now, all newly constructed facilities must abide by DOD and Homeland Security rules and regulations aimed at averting another 9/11 type disaster.

BRAC 2005 and the Future of Fort Lee

The long-term physical improvements that proceeded at a steady pace at Fort Lee over the last half century received a major boost when Congress passed Base Realignment and Closure legislation in 2005. The installation was given an important new mission – establish a Sustainment Center of Excellence that would serve as a focused training base for military supply, services, maintenance, munitions and transportation. The decision ignited a whole new building boom as the fort had to prepare for the arrival of the U.S. Army Ordnance Center and School from Aberdeen Proving Ground, Md., and the headquarters of the U.S. Army Transportation Center and School from Fort Eustis, Va. Also incoming was the Air Force and Navy Culinary Schools and the Defense Contract Management Agency.

Planning began for the construction of new classroom buildings, headquarters admin areas, fitness and dining facilities, outdoor training sites, barracks for students and government housing for military families. Among the centerpieces of the overall project was the $50 million Sustainment Center of Excellence headquarters building. In the summer of 2007, there was a ground-breaking ceremony on Sergeant Seay Field, the site of the new facility. To help make way for the structure, the First Logistical Command Memorial – which had been located on that site since 1974 – was carefully unmoored and moved to a more prominent spot facing the main entrance to Fort Lee.

The SCoE headquarters took 18 months to build and was formally dedicated in January 2009. It now houses the Combined Arms Support Command, logistics training and combat doctrine developers, and command groups for the Quartermaster, Ordnance, and Transportation Corps. During a ceremony on July 30, 2010, the old CASCOM headquarters was officially retired and the SCoE was proudly rededicated as “Mifflin Hall.”

Other recent milestones include the opening of the Army Logistics University in July 2009. The 400,000-square-foot building now offers more than 200 courses and trains upwards of 2,300 military and civilian students daily.

The colors of the U.S. Army Ordnance Corps were uncased at Fort Lee on Sept. 11, 2009. Construction of Ordnance Campus facilities on the north side of Fort Lee continues, but those that have been completed are indicative of the vision to create ultra-modern training and living facilities for 21st century sustainers. When it reaches full operational status, the Ordnance Campus will have a daily population of 5,000, including students, faculty and administrative personnel.

Fort Lee officially marked the arrival of the U.S. Army Transportation Corps and School on Aug. 18, 2010. The transition was bittersweet, given the corps' long-time connection with Fort Eustis, known as the "Home of Army Transportation," but its new role under the Sustainment Center of Excellence will be vital to an Army that's undergoing massive modernization to prepare for the challenges of current and future missions in an "urbanized warfare" setting.

By the time BRAC construction is completed in 2011, at a projected cost that will exceed $1.5 billion, the installation will have acquired 6.5 million square feet of new facilities. The daily population is expected to rise from 32,000 to nearly 47,000. The number of troops training at Fort Lee will nearly double to 70,000 each year.

Already proud of its illustrious past, Fort Lee is laying the groundwork for a brilliant future as the third largest training organization in the Army. About 35 percent of the force will pass through its schools each year, and its overarching mission is already being hailed as the "lifeblood of Army logistics."

3. CLASSIFICATIONS OF TELEPHONES:
