2008 USACAT Team Wins 13 Gold Medals

U.S. Army Culinary Arts Team trains in Grafenwöhr for 2008 Cooking Olympics

Grafenwöhr. If someone mentions the word "military," the first things that come to mind are military operations, guns, tanks and other heavy duty equipment. Nobody thinks about cooking, spoons and the preparation of meals by gourmet chefs like German Albin Schulbeck, or Johann Lutz.

That is a mistake because the U.S. Army also trains cooks who prepare meals in Army field kitchens to serve to deployed or training Soldiers. But that's not all they do. The teachers at the U.S. Army cooking school in Fort Lee, Va., regularly put together a team of the U.S. Army's best cooks known as the U.S. Army Culinary Arts Team which participates in cooking contests around the world.

After participating in the Culinary World Cup in Lamsburg in 2006, where the team won two gold medals, they will now enter the Cooking Olympics which take place in Friburg, Germany from Oct. 18-23.

On Sep. 15, the team arrived at Grafenwöhr Training Area to spend four weeks preparing for the competition. Headquarters Company of the German Army's Panzerlehrbrigade 12 from Andernach is providing the U.S. Army cooks with an Army field kitchen since the competition requires that the military teams cook their hot meals in a field kitchen and not in a regular restaurant kitchen.

Every team is free to select its very own meal and motto. The U.S. team's motto is "Native-American Feast." That is also reflected in the team's center piece which is the second category known as the "Restaurant of Nations," the ten participating military teams must cook a three-course meal in a field kitchen which is then served to the restaurant guests. Simultaneously, the jury tastes and judges it.

Every team is free to select its very own meal and motto. The U.S. team's motto is "Native-American Feast." That is also reflected in the team's center piece which one-course meals for one person that can be served during one week in the field. Two of the meals consist of soup, main course and desert while the remaining five meals feature an appetizer, a main course and a desert. All meals are then plated and presented cold.
